

Method of Detecting Immune Response

Transformed immortalized immune cell lines have traditionally been used as effectors for drug screening. Such programs may overlook an important principle: the initiation of a wide spectrum of immunomodulatory responses requires the collateral interactions of macrophage, B cells and T cells. This invention provides methods of detecting immune response of a substance using viable splenocytes